Helmet mount No.192 with velcro closure for bike helmet use.
1,2 m extension cord

Mounting:

You can attach this helmet mount to almost any kind of helmet with ventilation openings without using adhesives. It will only take you a few steps to fix a Lupine lighting head on your helmet. To ensure maximum life span even in unfavourable conditions, the inlay of the helmet mount is made of EPDM rubber foam. The side parts are made of genuine leather, each velcro strap is double sewn.

Mounting is very easy; just follow the instructions given on the next pages. Pictures will visualise each step.

Insert each velcro strap into two of the ventilation openings available on your helmet. Each helmet is different; therefore we cannot give precise advice on which openings to use. You may need to try various positions and find out which one suits you most. Hint: Many ventilation openings are sloping to the front. Thus, you should attach the helmet mount as close to the front rim as possible. Only then the helmet mount will not slip downward. Now you need to insert both velcro straps into the openings of the helmet mount as shown on the picture. This may be a little tricky as long as the straps are quite new. After a while, however, the straps will become softer and mounting will be easier.

Hint:

In most cases, both velcro straps are too long. However, you should shorten the straps to the suitable length only after mounting and unmounting the helmet mount completely. This will ensure that in the end the straps will not be too short.

Now pull both straps firmly (the helmet mount should be right in the middle), then press the upper velcro against the counterparts. You should do so also with the remaining parts of the upper straps all the way to the inside of the helmet. Then the straps will not stick out. Shake the helmet mount a little to test whether it is fixed safely. As a next step, mount your Lupine as shown on the picture. Your Lupine helmet light is now ready for use.
